.ORG "This is something that we could do for the parks in our lifetime." "Live the most wonderful life in the world, one park at a time." - Donald J. Kennedy (Retired Chief Superintendent), Haggin Museum and State Park, Personal Interview, 3 December 2015 On August 17th, 2015 Alan and I walked the entire trail in The OMM and into the backcountry areas of Haggin Museum and State Park, which were probably the greatest treasures of appreciation bequeathed to the people of California by an ancestor of Donald J. Kennedy, D.D.S. Haggin Museum On his first visit, President Kennedy told Alan about a historic Native American mound that had existed at the golf course of the park in the 1950s when a golf course existed in parts of the backcountry of the park. His appreciation of the mound still exists. His first suggestion that this might be his favorite park, when researched later in his life, was substantiated. Haggin Museum is a history museum situated directly south of the state park entrance to Haggin Ranch and is nestled against the foothills of the San Francisco Peninsula. The origins of the park lay in the mission era, with a Spanish land grant to Juan Ramirez in 1847. The museum dates back to 1948 when Sandig Kibling took over the Old Haggin School as a private museum and school. In 1953, the museum moved a mile east to the old Haggin Ranch Church. One of the original farm buildings lies across from the museum and is open for tour. At the time of the sandbag trench being dug across the agway, Dick Haggin built the building for homesteaders to meet and talk with other farmers who were applying for government-provided land. A total of 31 homesteaders met under the shade of a large live oak in the fall of 1925 and eventually formed the Haggin family of California. The first homesteaders settled in 1920; others came in 1922 and 1923. For a more complete factual description of the homesteaders, their year in California and their dates of death, click here. One of these homesteaders was a man named William Mulholland,
