Q: How can I make the default functions in finder and cp work on an entire directory? Let's say I have a folder ~/myfolder/ and I want it to copy/move/delete everything in it to somewhere else. What I usually do is to go to the myfolder folder in finder and copy everything to a new folder called ~/myfolder/backup, and then back to myfolder. Is there a way to make the default copy/move/delete functions work on an entire folder instead of having to go into each folder and use the separate functions? A: An easy way to do it is to prefix the commands with ~/myfolder instead of myfolder This will run the command(s) in the directory ~/myfolder or use ~/myfolder if the directory was not found. The command ~/myfolder is the same as cd ~/myfolder Is so you see it works on its own (which will always be sufficient). For example $ tree ~/myfolder

~/myfolder |— subfolder1 |— subfolder2 2 directories, 2 files
~/myfolder/subfolder1 /home/codewarrior/myfolder/subfolder1 |— file1 |— file2 2
directories, 2 files
~/myfolder/subfolder2 /home/codewarrior/myfolder/subfolder2 |— file1 |— file2 2
directories, 2 files

If you want to remove the ~/myfolder directory before running the command on the directory you can run `rm -rf ~/myfolder` which removes the current directory and returns it to the previous state. Q: Change the color of text displayed in JText 6d1f23a050
